To use $370,000 in federal funds

Council oks project priorities

Upland City Council has approved project priorities for $370,000 in Housing and Community Development Act funds.

The 1978-79 priorities will be submitted to the San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors for a public hearing in November.

Upland makes a joint application with the county for the federal funds which are intended to improve working and living conditions in low-

Projects approved by the council include improvements to Memorial Park, public improvements in the southeast part of the city, and housing loans and rehabilitation.

Plans for Memorial Park improvements include $45,000 for a parking lot; $6,000 for installation of a sanitary sewer line; and $100,000 for recreational development.

Improvements at the park are expected to improve living conditions for adjacent residences on 11th Street.

The Engineering Department is developing proposals for the parking lot and sewer line. The recreation department is working with engineering to develop the recreational uses such as playground equipment, fields, courts, or a jogging-exercise course. Memorial Park improvement was recommended to the council by the Upland Citizen Participation Advisory Committee which noted the heavy use of Memorial Park.

The council also approved allocation of $$77,800 for continued public improvements in the southeastern section of the city. Such improvements include installation of gutters, curbs, and sidewalks to improve the residential neighborhoods The citizen committee recommended continuation of the public improvements based on public input from improvements funded under previous years of the federal program.

The council also approved allocation of $140,000 for housing programs to assist low-income residents. Programs include a home repair service for senior citizens residents. disabled rehabilitation loan-grants, and code enforcement.

Priorities would provide $90,000 for rehabilitation grants and loans which allow low-income homeowners to obtain low-interest loans in order to rehabilitate their homes. In past years the program has provided eight loans totaling

Some $30,000 would be made available for senior citizen home repair. The committee recommended continuation of the senior repair assistance noting that 12 retired residents have had home repairs of up to $750.

The city hopes to be able to contact additional senior homeowners once the senior center is completed

An additional $20,000 is allocated to provide a code enforcement officer, requested by the Planning Department. The City Council also approved changes in allocations for the 1977-78 funding year. The city originally had planned $120,400 for purchase and development of a Ninth Street park.

The project has been dropped since the city has purchased a park on 11th Street for soccer playing fields. The citizens committee advised the council not to purchase the Ninth Street site since population in the area does not justify a park.

The council approved reallocation of the Ninth Street funds with $63,250 to be used for completion of the C Street Senior Center and $57,149 for additional improvements in the southeast section of the city.,

The citizen committee has formulated a three-year funding plan through 1980-81. The three-year which emphasizes neighborhood improvement and housing needs, is up-dated each

Once the 1978-79 projects are approved at the county level, they will be submitted for federal

County Adoption Agency sets own criteria

Adoptions not limited to 2-parent families

By Dan Carroll

Many people think that adoptions are allowed only in families that have two parents - the mother and the father. This is not true.

"We will accept applications from anyone who meets the requirements," said Wally Jordal, director of the San Bernardino County Adoption Agency.

"State requirements do not have anything to say about whether it's a single parent or a couple. We have a county policy and try to evaluate the kind of relationship a couple have," he noted

"Supposing you wanted to adopt. You would contact the agency and say you wanted to adopt," he said, adding that an application would be sent to the applicant's home. When returned, the applicant would be screened to determine if the person wishing to adopt meets agency

One of these criteria is age. A person who wants to adopt a child can be no more than 40 years older than the child he or she wishes to

The criteria are based on the needs of the children up for adoption and the evaluation of the applicant. The purpose of this is to try to match the parents to the children and vice versa, Jordal said. This process helps make adoptions permananet. Many times the San Bernardino County agency has cor-responded with agencies in Los Angeles, San Diego and Orange counties to match parents and

Because of restraint, abortions and better birth control methods, the number of adoption placements has diminished in recent years, Jordal said. It used to be that very young children were the only ones placed. Now older children and handicapped children are more in

In 1976 the San Bernardino County Adoption Agency placed 88 children. Forty were under the age of 2 and 48 were over the age of 2. The youngest child placed was 6 weeks and the oldest was in the early teens.

"To place a teen the child would have to be an exceptional child or the parent an exceptional parent,' said Jordal who noted that older children are usually already set in their ways and hard to mold into the family unit.

But with proper counseling and child/parent evaluation many older children have the opportunity to live normal family lives.

CURIOSITY - Chuck McCarty from the Tiny Tots preschool in Upland has a sneaking suspicion that someone is behind him.

Curiosity leads to inventiveness and is stressed as a quality at the preschool. Regular morning and afternoon sessions are held year around. For information call the Upland Recreation Department,

This year there have been 52 placements and there is a long waiting list for future parents, according to Jordal. Where do the children come

"People come into the agency and say that they have a child or children that they cannot take care of, or we have children that have been placed by relatives or friends for the family," Jordal said.

The parents must have legal sanction to place their children up for adoption. This is usually approved if the parents make up their mind that they cannot adequately take care of the child or children. A number of children have been placed in the custody of the court because "they have been neglected, abused or there have been certain situations where the parent just cannot manage to take care of them," Jordal said. When this happens the child is put into foster care. This is not a permanent adoption and the child and parent are reunited after a period of time. But all too often the parent relinquishes the right to see the child and it is put up for adoption in a permanent home.

There has been confusion about the difference between a foster parent and a permanently adopting parent, Jordal noted. Foster parents are not permanent but give their time on a temporary basis. They give a child a place to stay and a healthy atmosphere to live in until a permanent parent is found. Often the foster parent will become attached to the child and will adopt him or her permanently.

Some of the services offered by the agency are: natural parent service, applicant service, and children service. The natural parent service helps the parent who is giving up a child. Jordal said he works "with them for a period of time to make sure that they are comfortable with the decision that they have made ... It's quite a traumatic thing for natural parents to give up a child.' The applicant service helps the new parent during the adoption process that usually takes about a year to complete. People who work with the children supervise the placement and work with the parent to insure that it goes as smoothly as Many organizations have been started for and because of adopting parents. There is also an organization that helps the child find his or her natural parents after they are of age. Many new and revolutionary ideas are propagating in the Southern California adoption scene, especially in this area, Jordal

The result of the efforts of the county adoption agency is that less and less children need help, and more suitable families are found. But there seems to always be room for at least one more.

We are now passing through a period when the "hay fever" problem is most evident. The flowers and grasses are in bloom now and the pollen from these blossoms are in the atmosphere in great numbers particularly now since the air is very dry.

But don't put all the blame for the discomforts of "hay fever" on the pollen. It's natural for ollen to be in the air. It is not natural (or at least not normal) for these products of nature to cause disease by them-

Award homemaker services contract

Supervisors settle controversy

After months of wrangling over a contract to provide homemaker services for the elderly, disabled and blind, the county board of supervisors finally settled the controversy Monday.

Over the objections of the present contract holder, the supervisors awarded the contract to the county's Community Services Department, at an estimated $728,000 for the eight months starting Nov. 1.

The department submitted the lowest of four bids to provide the services, which enable the elderly, disabled and blind to remain in their own homes rather than be placed in hospitals, nursing homes and other institutions

Earlier this year, the contract had been awarded to Homemakers International Co., a division of Upjohn Co., the drug manufacturer, at a cost of $1,247,890 for the year starting July 1. But the state Department of Health disapproved the contract and told the county Department of Public Social Services (welfare), which administers the homemakers program, to have the bids resub-

The contract with Homemakers International Co. was allowed to continue through Sept. 30, and has been extended for an additional month.

However, the state Department of Health rejected the county's request to have the bids resubmitted for a third time, after a dispute arose over the bid submitted by the county Community Services Department.

The department had been instructed to amend its proposal after bids had been submitted and disclosed for a second time. It had to do so to take into account the possibility it might have to provide for unemployment insurance for its employes as County Administrative Officer Earl Goodwin said the department would probably not have to provide for such insurance and was instructed to amend its bid only to allow a comparison with the bids of three private firms.

Charles Hoffman, zone manager for Homemakers International Co., objected, telling the supervisors his firm wasn't allowed to amend its bid after it was opened. The firm sub-mitted the highest of the four bids in the second round.

"The only thing I say is, 'Are you really acting in the best interests of the people?' "Hoffman asked the supervisors Monday.

"I'm getting to resent the continued remark, reflecting upon the board, that we're not taking into account the best interests of the people," Supervisor Joseph Kamansky of Upland replied.

"You can have a different view-point. You're looking at it from the contract standpoint I have no ax to grind. You have a contract to work on, and I don't blame you," Kamansky added.

Nevertheless, Kamansky was the lone dissenter on the vote to award the contract to the county Community Services Department, at a cost some $38,000 lower than the amended bid it was asked to submit.

Chairman Robert O. Townsend of Chino abstained from the 3-1 vote. The state Department of Health told the county that in the absence of any legal justification for requiring bids to be resubmitted for a third time, the board of supervisors had to award the contract to the lowest of the four bidders.

Keep bugs out of the kitchen

Bugs in the pantry aren't as bad as bats in the belfry, but the problem can drive you "batty," notes Leslie Wood, consumer information specialist. "Combating calls them for mobilization," she says. You may have to take out every item to determine which ones have been infested and to seek a source. Then, she says, there's the question of how to use an insecticide in a food area.

Favorite targets of insects are cereals, grains, crackers and prepared mixes. Some insects bore into cardboard containers.

Wood suggests removing everything and washing shelves, walls and drawers with a disinfectant cleaner. Then treat walls and shelves with a residual insecticide

"Be sure to get it into cracks, crevices and joints," she advises. 'That's where the enemy lurks and breeds."

When using any insecticide always cover food, dishes, pots and pans or remove them from the area to avoid contamination.

Early Care For Your Baby's

Feet

by Harold Berk This little piggy went to mar-

This little piggy stayed home.

This little piggy had roast

This little piggy had none. And this little piggy cried "Wee, wee, wee" all the way

At the start, baby's feet and toes get plenty of attention. They are, in fact, one of the first joys of discovery that mother and child share. All too soon, however those tiny feet are clothed in little booties and mom is deeply involved in the seemingly endless tasks of childrearing. So that baby's feet won't be forgotten in the rush, you need an understanding of where your baby's first little steps will lead. Have you ever flown in an airplane, looked down on the plains and mountains, and wondered at the immensity of the country and the earth? Perhaps you've been awed by the speed at which you were being whisked across country and reflected upon the pioneers struggling Westward by wagon and afoot. From that lofty vantage point then, you will be appreciative of the fact that your child will walk the equivalent of three times around the Earth during his lifetime

And not once will he be able to trade old feet in on new models. This is one mode of transportation that's going to have to get good maintenance.

They Killed Charlie

They killed Charlie. Not with criminal intent, but with a sense of duty. Not maliciously, but with compassion. But no matter what the reason, Charlie is dead.

For almost all his 12 years — a long life for an alley cat —Charlie was a typical cat — ornery, independent, mischievous. For the last few weeks, he was searching, festless, and nervous. Once he scorned human comfort. Now he craved it — snuggling up against his owner. Against anyone. Just sitting there. Quietly.

Charlie was dying. The doctor said that it was a bladder infection. Incurable. Charlie was slowly being dehydrated. He would drink the water in his dish, then drink all the water in all the other dishes in the house. He would crawl into the sink and, with his front paws, try to get every last drop of water available. But it was never enough.

The doctor again looked at Charlie. Again he ran the tests. Again he declared that Charlie was dying.

"Could surgery save him?" he was asked. He shook his head. He didn't really know. Perhaps. Perhaps not. But it would be expensive. Very expensive. The doctor had said the same words before, time after time. Many times in his career. He didn't like having to say what he did. But there would be no tears. Not from him. He couldn't cry. Not on the outside. It was something that had to be said. Something that had to be done.

They kill horses that break legs. And they kill cats that get too old. No one likes to see suffering. Not the doctor. Not the owner. Not anyone. And so, the owner, tears in her eyes, nodded. It wasn't much of a nod. But it was a

Then they took Charlie. Perhaps he knew what was about to happen. Perhaps he didn't. Either way, he didn't have a chance to object. To plead. To beg. Everyone had a chance to plead. To beg. But not Charlie. The decision, even if reluctantly, was made, not by him, but for him.

And so Charlie died. One small animal among millions. Billions. One animal whose fate was determined by Symptoms include fever (102 degrees - 106 degrees F.), loss of appetite, and a dry, hacking cough that can last 10 - 16 days or longer. The cough is aggravated if the animal is exercised; or becomes excited. Sometimes a light touch on an affected horse's throat will induce coughing. At this time, there is no product to specifically control race track cough. Antibiotics are commonly used to prevent secondary bacterial infection, but they are ineffective against viruses and the primary sympton - the cough. Even when treated with antibiotics, horses are generally withdrawn from training and competition for 21 days to prevent recurrence of symptoms.

A recent report in a veterinary journal described a severe outbreak of race track cough affecting 1,000 out of 1,800 horses stabled at a major track in Florida, threatening to shorten the racing program there. A vaccine for another equine respiratory disease (hinopueumonitis) administered to try to control the outbreak, since chronic cough is one of the
